Gov21: The 21st Century Government Innovation Program

It is critical for 21st-Century government leaders to develop new skills and deepen their understanding of how to navigate within our current federal system.

Every day, leaders in the federal government must make strategic decisions; they need to decide which problems to tackle, how to monitor progress, how to engage stakeholders, and how to implement policies. To pursue their agencies' mission in an increasingly complex environment, they must operate more efficiently, effectively, and innovatively.

As a result of the Gov21 program, participants will:

- Use design thinking to strategize, solve problems and develop new initiatives.
- Use science and data to streamline activities.
- Take full advantage of resources to do better and act faster.
- Learn how to facilitate effective meetings.
